Course Practices:

1. Participation

2. Late Papers and Assignments

All assignments must be turned in on time! Late assignments will result in a 10% deduction per day. This does not apply to exams.

3. Extra Credit

Extra credit may be awarded, ample student notification will occur when instants arise.

4. Discussion board rules and etiquette:

In an online class, the discussion board is our virtual meeting place. The discussion board is where we will carry on the interaction that we would traditionally do during class meetings. The advantage is that we will not have any driving time and we have much flexibility with respect to the time when we do our discussions. You are expected to spend several hours per week preparing for and carrying out the weekly class discussions just like you would with a conventional class.

The rules for discussions are much the same for an online class as they are for a traditional (face to face) class. Please be respectful of others during discussions. You must keep your responses focused on the topic and your responses must carry the discussion forward in a positive manner. You are encouraged to express your opinions and to indicate why you might disagree with the opinion of others but personal attacks are never appropriate.

You will find that those people who submit their initial entries early in the discussion period will get the most responses. It will be a more rewarding experience to you to “say” something early so your classmates have time to think about what you said and to respond.

Our intent is to have a real discussion. In order for that to happen, we must read entries of our classmates on a regular basis and throughout the discussion period. You cannot be a full participant in the discussion if you make all of your entries on one day or within a small part of the discussion period. The attached grading rubric for discussions describes how you will be rewarded for your discussions.

Here are some additional rules and conventions that we will use in this class to help us to keep our discussions organized:

1. Create a NEW thread for your initial entry on any discussion topic.
2. Clearly mark your initial entry by including your name and the words “Initial Entry” as the thread title.
Examples: “Michael’s Initial Entry”
3. When you respond to someone’s entry use a title like “Michael’s response to Janet”. Without a clear title it is sometimes difficult to determine who is talking to whom.
4. If you respond to another person’s discussion and would like him or her to reply to your response, indicate that fact by including three question marks (???) at the end of your response title. This signal tells the other person that you would like to continue the discussion with them. Please check your discussion board entries periodically to see if someone has posted a response that requires your attention.
5. You may enter your discussion in either text form or you may record them and attach them as sound or video files. Some of us communicate more effectively in text and others find that oral communication works better for us. Feel free to use the mode that fits you the best.

Instructional Techniques and Practices:

For this online class you will be expected to check and maintain ROC regularly. Any and all updates and assignments will be posted there. It is also expected you stay with our schedule and are reading the book as new chapters are listed on the schedule. The discussion board is also an important component to an online class. All I ask is you be honest and open-minded when discussing our musical topics. As for access to me, feel free to set up a face to face meeting anytime. Email works best!
